Try to find internships and other paid or non-paid opportunities to gain work experience. But, as a student, you should probably only get a credit card if you know that you'll be able to pay your balance in full each month. But the measures have drawbacks. Check with your college counselor to see which types of courses and subjects are most relevant to your major. I found major pieces of this work very useful, and I would encourage those considering it to read the chapters most relevant to their course outcomes and adapt when they adopt. Colleges look for students who complete challenging courses and commit to earning a more rigorous high school diploma.
