He also said "There are students that are so advanced they belong two grades higher. Legislation to protect Dreamers—including the 20, educators with DACA—that includes pathways to legal status or citizenship would not only increase the GDP, creating more revenue with which to improve public schools, but it would also mean that students and families across the country currently living in fear of deportation could focus on both their education and creating a better future for themselves and their communities. The formula that dictates where Title I funds go has presented several problems.

Honestly, I feel my English knowledge and skill has been dumb. The rest comes out of regular state and local education revenues. In recent years, as options for reading and viewing content have diversified, advertisers have had increasing difficulty reaching mass audiences of customers.

That was the original goal of Title I funding at the federal level—to try to get would seem to be impossible to separate an educational system from the external environment the students find themselves in every day.
